

The Complete Guide To Finding The Best Private Label Manufacturers

Darren DeMatas December 18, 2019 20 Comments

If you want to sell physical products online, a private label brand is the way to go.

Finding reliable private label manufacturers to partner with is a critical step in a business plan.

Some 'experts' have made it out to be a very complex and hard process. It is not.

You don't have to pay an insurmountable amount to learn how to find suppliers and source products.

The truth is that you can find a manufacturer in a very short time. You just need to know where to look and what to avoid.

This guide will help you understand those things, give you ideas on modifications that you can make and manufacturers in that niche.

Why Private Label?

Trying to squeeze margins out of generic products will cause your business to fall like a pack of cards.

Private labeling could help you eliminate this because you have control over the quality of your products.

It is also one of the most profitable ecommerce business models as you can rank as a unique brand with it.

You'd also be able to control customer experience because you get to plan your product specifics to the T.

Another good thing is that you make all the decisions. You are in control unlike wholesaling another brand's product. With wholesaling, there may be restrictions on how you receive inventory. This is for a product that you cannot even control quality or price.

Even big brands are tapping into this. Amazon joined this ship a while ago. Its private label brands are among the top ranking brands on their site in sales.

Warning: if you want to succeed on the haul, your brand needs to live outside of Amazon. If not, they could bust your bubble at some point. That's because they can use the marketplace machine much more than you can.

A private label business is nice but running it could be complex. You need to be vigilant and have a legal team to make sure that your manufacturer remains honest.

Nevertheless, if you have searched for private label products that have market opportunity and you are a 100% sure that you have a sellable modification, then read on.

How To Find Private Label Manufacturers

Finding suppliers that deliver standard products is not hard. They are on the internet.

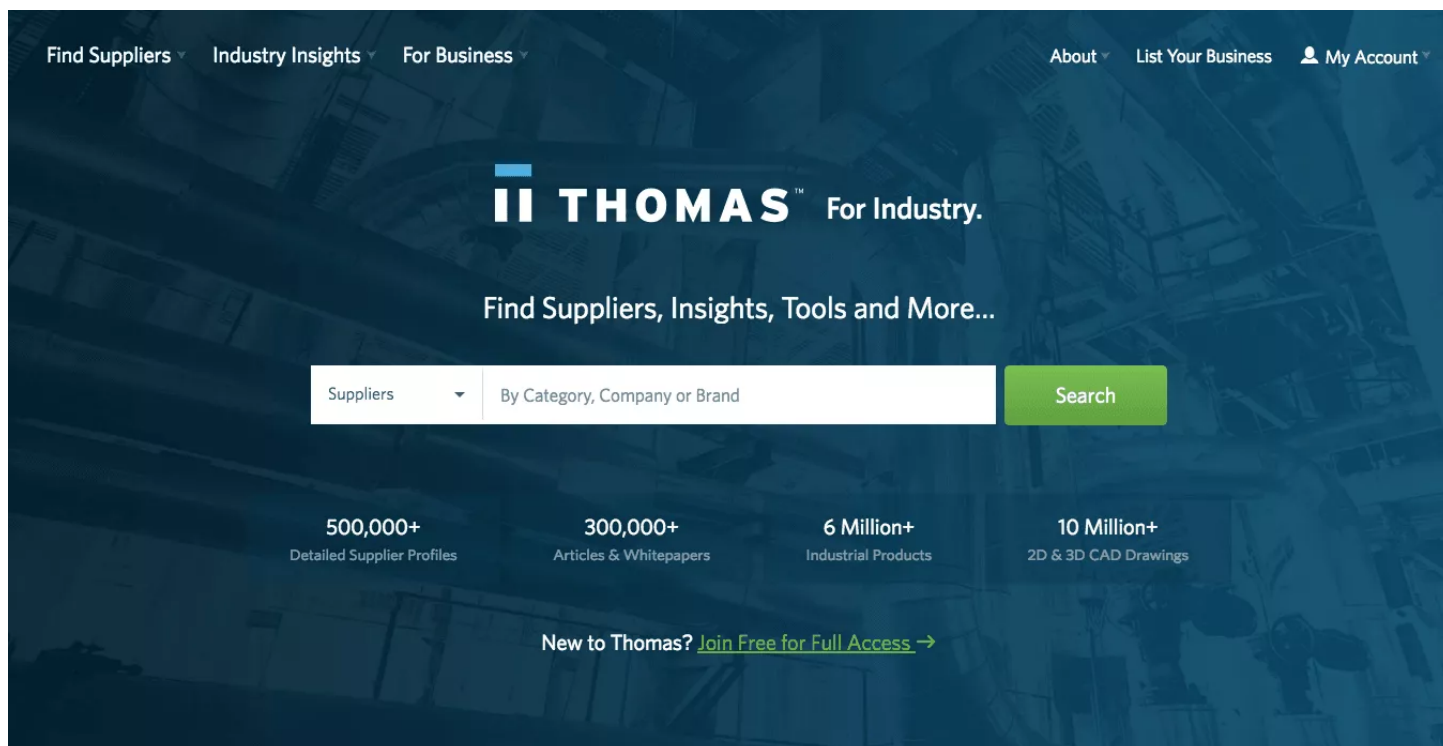

However, you wouldn't get much information in this regard out of Oberlo, AliExpress and other dropship directories or tools.

You need to search on sites like Google, Thomasnet and Alibaba.

If you know the art of Google-Fu, you'll be able to surface manufacturers' information from search results easily.

If you search for "handbag private label", you'll see a lot of results. Sift through to get what you want. This requires digging and it could involve a lot of trial and error before you get the right one.

ThomasNet

One method I love to use is a suppliers' directory. Thomasnet is one of them. It is free and you can search for manufacturers by product and location. So you can type in "private label manufacturers USA" or the product. The results will show manufacturers' certifications and the products that they sell.

Another place that you can search for private label manufacturers is Alibaba, not AliExpress. On Alibaba, just input the keyword or product you want to sell. One good thing about Alibaba's results is that you can see third-party verifications of the product and certifications of the company.

With this, you can be certain of what you are getting. There are tons of products here and a good number of them are less expensive because they are made overseas (especially in Asia). One downside to this method is that you may contact a non-native English speaker. The language barrier can be frustrating.

There are also other methods. If you are an Ecommerce CEO member, check out finding suppliers. It is one of the paid courses.

What To Look Out For When Selecting A Manufacturer

Finding a supplier is not enough, you have to know who and what to filter out. I'll divide the process into three.

Before Contacting The Manufacturers

You may notice some sketchy manufacturers by reading reviews made by verified purchases.

When looking at reviews of those products, you should look out for the way they handle negative feedback. Also, you can take a look at the verifications. This is something I mentioned above about Alibaba.

Another thing to check is their product specialization. Seeing images of the exact work that they have done and sales made of them would help you know if they specialize in producing what you want to sell.

You don't want to work with a jack of all trades and master of none.

Also, check out their price. You don't want to order an item that is $20, when the best seller is sold on Amazon for $20 or lower. Shop around and compared with other suppliers.

If you can see their minimum order quantity, that's also glorious.

You should also find out about shipping.

- What will it cost to ship in bulk?
- Will you save on shipping in bulk overseas?
- Do they even ship to your country of residence?
- What is the turnaround time on any order?

Another thing that you need to do before making contact is to have a business license and bank account. If you use your personal details, you may not be taken seriously by good suppliers and could fall into the hands of sketchy ones. This also stands for the suppliers. When you contact them, ensure that you are given a verified business name, bank account, licenses, and certifications.

During Initial Contact

When you have gathered all that information, reach out to your potential suppliers to confirm if the information you have gathered is accurate. Then you need to verify if they private label, white label, or both. Some suppliers use 'private label' on their website but are actually white labeling.

You also need to take care of inventory and fulfillment. Amazon FBA is a good option if you don't want to be too stressed out with fulfilling orders. You'll need to find out how you'd be shipping from their lab to Amazon or your warehouse.

After A Positive Response

When you receive a response from the company confirming all those information and giving you details that align with your expectations, you can request for a sample.

Since you are sourcing your products, samples are very important. You need to see what you plan on selling before you make a bulk order.

Some companies give free samples but shipping from an overseas manufacturer will cost you. It doesn't make much sense to travel all the way to China to vet the product so you'd have to pay for shipping.

If this is your first go, make sure that your products are simple and scalable. You don't need to reinvent the wheel.

Even as you vet the quality, shipping, price and all of that, understand that there are legal risks involved in running a private label business. These risks can come from regulations, trademarks, or the materials of your products. Brands have been sued for this. It is recommended that you use a private label lawyer and that you educate yourself before you do anything.

In addition, before you rush into working with them, sign on the dotted line. A conversation is not enough. No matter how trustworthy the manufacturer may seem, get a contract down. This will prevent future problems.

There are other things you need to ask and look at for that I cannot cram into this blog post, you can check out my premium course for details.

Clothing, Shoes And Accessories Manufacturers

The ecommerce fashion industry keeps on expanding year-on-year. It is predicted to rise to $712.9 billion by 2022. For apparel alone, the CAGR is expected to keep to 8.8% in the USA, 8.7% in Europe, and 14.1% in China. Shoes, accessories and bags continue to grow in double digits and this is predicted to continue for years.

If you wish to tap into this, it is not that hard. You just have to think of the modifications you can make. Right now, personalization and cruelty-free materials are big deals.

You can choose to create a bag that is made with green and cruelty-free materials.

In keeping it very simple, you may prefer these other modifications that suppliers typically make:

- Add finishing options like zippers, buttons or pom-poms.
- Choose the style and color of your finishing options
- Change the product color or fabric weight.
- Add fabric customization

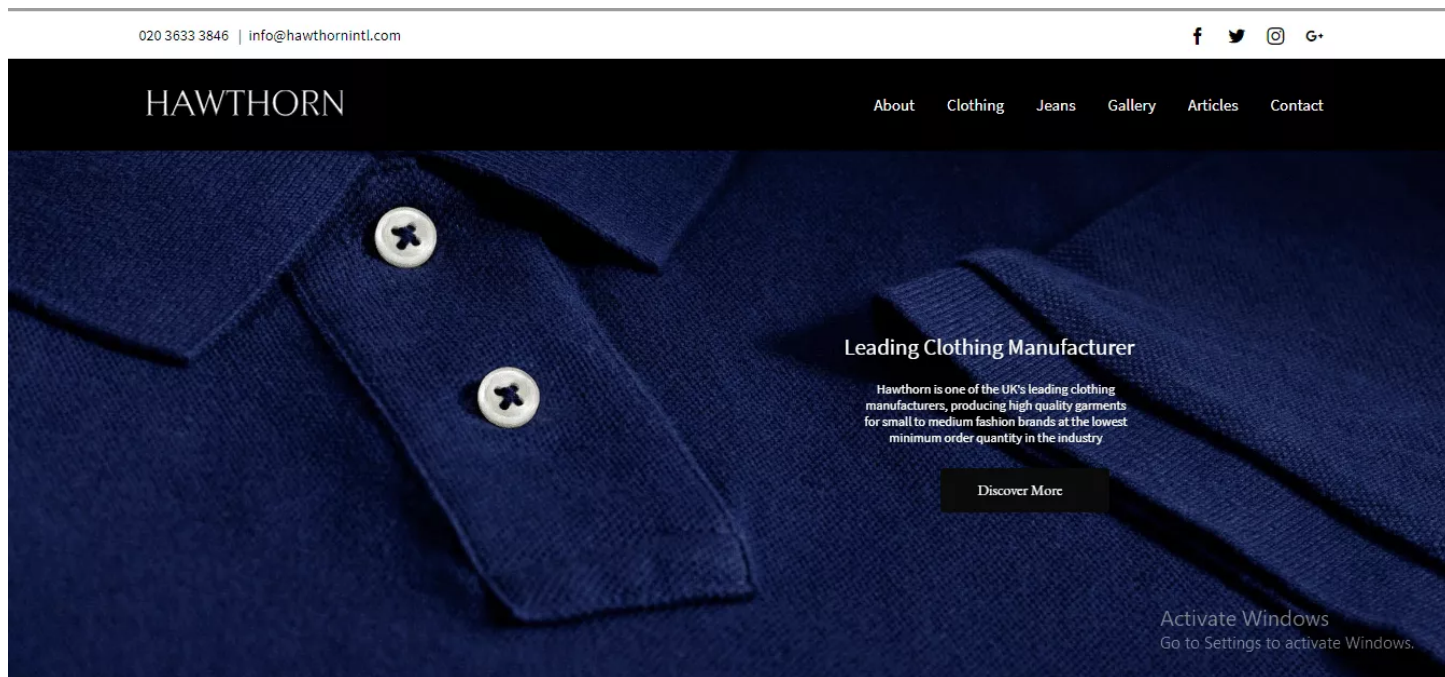

You can contact these suppliers below to get more information.

Moshi Leather Bag

If you want to private label leather bags, Moshi Leather Bag has it down to pat. Customize your bag designs, leather materials, color and fabric lining. You can also choose zipper options. Their response time is quite fast and they also offer dropshipping and white label services.

The USA Crafts industry is worth over $44 billion. It has shown a 45% increase in the past six years and shows no sign of slowing down. The supplies industry has also popped up; from being in millions of dollars, it is now a billion dollar industry. This is because of the increase in the sales of and interest in craft products.

There are so many modifications that you can make here depending on the product. For example, if you want to sell candles, you can change the mold design.

Other modifications that suppliers typically do include:

- Add/remove colors in a face/body paint
- Modify the design/shape of a jar, bottle, or cup
- Change the fragrance
- Add inscriptions or pictures on jar candles and t-shirts
